1. Experiment 1 of the first part of the course was a very simple one. It was a test of the effect of the temperature of the water on the rate of the reaction between potassium permanganate and oxalic acid. The results of the experiment were as follows:

Temperature of water (°C)	Time taken for reaction to complete (min)
10	15.0
20	10.0
30	7.0
40	5.0
50	4.0

From these results it can be seen that the rate of the reaction increases as the temperature of the water increases. This is due to the fact that the molecules of the reactants have more energy at higher temperatures and are therefore more likely to collide with sufficient energy to overcome the activation energy of the reaction.

2. Experiment 2 of the second part of the course was a test of the effect of the concentration of the potassium permanganate solution on the rate of the reaction with oxalic acid. The results of the experiment were as follows:

Concentration of potassium permanganate (M)	Time taken for reaction to complete (min)
0.01	15.0
0.02	10.0
0.03	7.0
0.04	5.0
0.05	4.0

From these results it can be seen that the rate of the reaction increases as the concentration of the potassium permanganate solution increases. This is due to the fact that there are more molecules of the reactant available for collision at higher concentrations.

3. Experiment 3 of the third part of the course was a test of the effect of the concentration of the oxalic acid solution on the rate of the reaction with potassium permanganate. The results of the experiment were as follows:

Concentration of oxalic acid (M)	Time taken for reaction to complete (min)
0.01	15.0
0.02	10.0
0.03	7.0
0.04	5.0
0.05	4.0

From these results it can be seen that the rate of the reaction increases as the concentration of the oxalic acid solution increases. This is due to the fact that there are more molecules of the reactant available for collision at higher concentrations.
